One of my first outings when the coronavirus lockdown started to ease was to pick up my long-awaited, signed copy of artist Hank Pitcher's namesake retrospective at Sullivan Goss - An American Gallery in downtown Santa Barbara.

Gallery director Jeremy Tessmer, who represents Pitcher's work and published the book back in February, said the hardback has smashed expectations.

That's not surprising, but with 40 years of bold, iconic oil paintings from which to choose, selecting the ones to fill the 253-page collection was a monumental challenge for Pitcher, Tessmer and Nathan Vonk, the owner of Sullivan Goss at 11 E. Anapamu St.

Tessmer told Noozhawk he first talked to Pitcher about the project seven years ago, but studio work got in the way. They picked up that conversation four years ago.

"Hank is very articulate and thoughtful about design issues, but he is also a visual person," he explained. "He could see a prototype in print and he got very involved."

Together, they chose the monograph's images as well as writers with art historian chops — like City University of New York art history professor Jennifer Samet.

"It was a very fulfilling project," Tessmer said. "Even after knowing Hank for 16 years, I still learned a great deal about him and his work."

Tessmer went through every Kodachrome slide in Pitcher's archive and fleshed out his timeline.

There are wonderful stories that Pitcher wrote about growing up in Isla Vista, playing football at San Marcos High School, attending UC Santa Barbara and eventually teaching art, as well as priceless musings on his paintings and body of work.

Pitcher has lived in Santa Barbara for most of his life — he and his wife, Susan, raised two now-adult sons, Lincoln and Hart, here — but he got his art start in the early 1970s in New York City. There, he was inspired by artists Charles Burchfield, Jane Freilicher, Alex Katz and Fairfield Porter.

When I got home, I spent hours slowly turning the pages of this beautiful book, engrossed by the familiar images and Pitcher's personal voice.

As a professor at UCSB, a short hop from his beloved Coal Oil Point studio, he has introduced hundreds of students to environmental and figurative art. As an artist, he has made his mark by elevating Santa Barbara's signature look.

"Although Santa Barbara is a small place, it does have a remarkable place on the world map," said Tessmer, observing that owning a piece of Pitcher's work is like having a piece of Santa Barbara with you.

The book is packed with beloved images that locals like me call their own. Surfboards, the Coral Casino Beach & Cabana Club, the Gaviota coast, Point Conception, Coal Oil Point, Miramar Beach are all well-represented.

The figures and portraits section includes some of my favorites, like his wife, Susan, in a hammock; "Roy at Coal Oil Point;" "Woman with White Sunglasses;" and "Tandem Surfing" to name just a few from that section.

In 2004, I was asked to sit for a Pitcher portrait in a collaboration he did with Susan Pitcher's Coast Village

Road boutique, Dressed. I have cherished memories of getting to know not just the artist but the then-Santa Barbara Middle School dad from hours of easy conversation, listening to jazz music and gazing out at the ocean from his studio.

"It is relatively easy to paint someone from a photo," Pitcher said of the finished work. "But being with a live person for a long period of time and staring at their faces has its risks."

That portrait is among my prized possessions, and my young granddaughters often stop to stare at the image of a woman in a hot pink cocktail dress with the plunging neckline and a leopard print coat.

"Is that really you?" they ask.

Well, I reply, like any book, painting or picture, it is one image of me from a different time in my life.

Tessmer summed up Pitcher's impact the best.

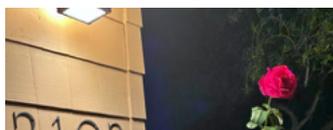

"Hank's paintings are worthwhile because they are authentic and beautiful," he said. "These days such stuff is in too short supply."

Noozhawk Asks: What's Your Question?

Welcome to Noozhawk Asks, a new feature in which you ask the questions, you help decide what Noozhawk investigates, and you work with us to find the answers.

Here's how it works: You share your questions with us in the nearby box. In some cases, we may work with you to find the answers. In others, we may ask you to vote on your top choices to help us narrow the scope. And we'll be regularly asking you for your feedback on a specific issue or topic.

We also expect to work together with the reader who asked the winning questions to find the answer together. Noozhawk's objective is to come at questions from a place of curiosity and openness, and we believe a transparent collaboration is the key to achieve it.

The results of our investigation will be published here in this Noozhawk Asks section. Once or twice a month, we plan to do a review of what was asked and answered.
